

Federal Agencies - Websites -

Most federal agencies maintain websites to provide information about our country's government to the public. The agencies used most frequently for advocacy and legislative purposes are listed below.

White House - www.whitehouse.gov

This is official website of the United States White House. It contains information about latest news events, current policies, appointments, offices and agencies, and historical facts about the White House.

U.S. Senate - www.senate.gov

This is the United States Senate's official website. It contains a list of senators and their committee assignments, the floor and committee schedules, information on legislation and records, and historical information about the Senate.

U.S. House of Representatives - www.house.gov

This is the official website of the United States House of Representatives. It contains a list of representatives, their address and phone numbers, website address, and committee assignments. It also contains information about the legislative process, bills and laws, and a link to the United States Code.

U.S. Department of Education - www.ed.gov

The United States Department of Education's website contains the latest updates to the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB) as well as information about education resources, research and statistics, legislative policies and regulations, and general education information. There is specific information for students, parents, teachers, and administrators.

U.S. Department of Education Publications – www.ed.gov/about/pubs/intro/pubdb.html

More than 33,000 publications are available to the public from the United States Department of Education. Use one of four search techniques provided at this site to find and order a copy of the publication you are interested in.

No Child Left Behind Act – www.ed.gov/nclb/landing.jhtml?src=pb

Information specific to the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB) is available here. This site is maintained by the U.S. Department of Education and is updated regularly.

Library of Congress – www.loc.gov

The United States Library of Congress' website contains a wide variety of information, including information about American history, current and past legislation, and world cultures.

Government Printing Office – www.gpoaccess.gov/index.html

The United States Government Printing Office website provides official information from all three branches of the Federal Government. It contains information about the legislative process, congressional materials, legislative resources, and a variety of additional resources. Use a variety of search techniques to find the information you need.